TOBACCO AND WEATHER.
Dampness Has Unfavorable Effect on the Weed in its Various Forms.

"Did you ever think about the influence the weather has on cigars and tobacco in its other forms?" asked a man in a cigar stand, relates the New Orleans Times-Democrat. "My attention was called to the matter but a few minutes ago by a customer who came in to register a complaint. He was wrothy because the cigars he has bought for the past few days have not smoked as well as usual, and he evidently thought I had switched the brand on him. It never occurred to him that meteorological conditions might have something to do with the cigars. It happens that I smoked the same brand the customer generally buys, and I could understand that his complaint was well grounded.

"I explained to him that the damp weather which we have experienced for the past few days was responsible for the condition of his cigars. You see, we have had an unusually heavy rainfall. During such time in this section of the country it is impossible to keep our stock of cigars and tobacco dry enough. Because of the peculiar conditions here in this respect the walls of buildings sweat, as we are in the habit of saying. That is, they become wet and remain in this condition until the weather breaks—until the sun comes out to dry the dampness. How does it affect cigars? They become damp and soft, and have the appearance of being new, or green, to adopt the technique of the trade. They do not burn well, smoke in an uneven sort of way, and, as a rule, if I may judge from my own experience, it is necessary to throw one-half of them away. There is one thing which I cannot explain, and that is the change which takes place in the flavor of the cigars. But the flavor is unquestionably changed. Cigars that have a delightful flavor under ordinary conditions become strong and offensive to the taste and frequently burn and blister the tongue. That's why it is necessary to throw them away before they are smoked to the tip. This is what the weather does for cigars. To some extent it has the same influence on chewing tobacco, and not infrequently we have to throw tobacco away because it sours. Customers do not stop to think about these things as a rule, and often they will quit a place because they think the cigar man is giving them the worst of it."
